Domestic Style Vs Remote Style

Interesting Things About Freelance

The Huge and Growing Market Opportunity

For a decade, the number of the independent workforce has exploded like never before with their major shift from the traditional method of doing work. This major shift has brought significant changes in the economy of every country.

The Freelance industry has become a flourishing platform for business interactions where job providers and job seekers connect with one another on a largely huge scale for either doing a job or providing a job.

Freelance workers potentially could make up 40% of the workforce by 2020.

Economic Impact of an Independent Work Force

Not only is the size of the independent workforce growing, but also its contribution to the global economy. Online freelance marketplaces helped independent workers generate more than 1.1 trillion dollars in total revenue in the United States alone. Imagine this on a global scale.

Currently, freelancing is among the fastest growing job trends in the world, formal US secretary of labor estimated that 40% of US workforce will comprise of independent contractors and will form almost the national workforce in a decade. More so, Upwork and Freelancers Union report suggests that freelancers will become the US workforce by 2027. With the growth projection of 3.5% every year, when you consider this overwhelming trend in the freelancing industry, then the need to maintain a well robust freelance ecosystem cannot be overemphasized.
